

The agony of a nation at war with itself

Exhausted and bleeding, Croatian militiamen rest after a battle with Serbian fighters in the eastern Croatian village of Tenja, where the two communities are divided by hatred and prejudice. A truce was arranged hastily, but not before at least eight people – four of them civilians – were killed. Few in Tenja expect the ceasefire to hold. Our picture was taken by Paul Lowe, below, who was caught up in the conflict.

Report: Page 12

